Hello, I hope you had a great half term.

The children have settled in well and have started from where they left off!

In Maths, we have been converting metric measurements. The children found this difficult at first, but have persevered and can confidently do this now. We have also been solving word problems involving length and weight. They have been using a vast amount of mathematical thinking and have shown great knowledge!

In English, we have been starting to look at persuasive writing. The children have written an argument about whether or not we should ban playtimes and have also written a letter to ask Mrs Holditch for a treat, as they have been working so hard.

In RE, we have started our new topic of Islam. We have explored the Five Pillars, and have begun talking about what they represent and how we can learn from them. Some very insightful comments were made by the children.

For home learning, I would like the children to complete a worksheet on converting metric measurements. This is in their homework folders and we have gone through the questions together. Can this be handed in on Wednesday 9th November please?

I hope you have a wonderful weekend
